TECHNICAL SKILLS

Having spent a great deal of time with many content creation outlets I have a broad range of technical skills, which start with computer hardware and building. This continues into HTML and CSS; Illustrator; InDesign; some limited Photoshop; extensive use of Audacity and the use of Ubuntu and Arch Linux for personal computing.

I am a Web Development student at Manchester Metropolitan University, working towards a full stack development skillset with plans to branch into design for both print and screen. My experience in customer service as well as a flourishing work ethic and independence at work allow me to be a highly versatile employee.

I am seeking a part-time placement to extend the duration of my time at University.

2014

Clarks, Dorset

Took a summer position involving serving and assisting customers. Completed training for accuracy using equipment at work, as well as training to work with autistic children and catering my sales choices towards those with disabilities or medical problems. This placement ended up lasting over a 3 year span. During this time I worked in the hectic and extremely busy period of Back to School, delivering high quality customer service and building strong communication aptitude between colleagues to improve workflow and increase sales.

PERSONAL DEVELOPMENT

Since moving to Manchester my hobbies related to computing and design have transformed into an intense passion for my work and learning. One of my defining characteristics is an intense drive for personal improvement in all aspects of life. This particularly focuses on work ethic and interpersonal capability, both areas which I have developed tirelessly over the past four years to great effect and have no inclination to stop.

AVAILABILITY

My current schedule dictates that I am not free to work on Tuesdays, Wednesdays or Thursdays. While it is unlikely this may change per term. I am currently available every day other than these although weekday shifts are preferable.
